How awful. These stories always hit too close to home for me.

Indeed.

Four friends, sitting around a table, forgetting the need to put on the situational awareness with the suit.

Oh, fuck.

That explains where DTH is off to.

I imagine that was the cause of the tumbleweeds, yeah.

Ah, hell, right in my backyard. And a friend of mine knows the wife of one of those officers.
And in the ECR tumble of sorrow and anger and incomprehension of people's cruelty there is also this fear: My restaurant will be open all night, we're expecting to have quite a few cops as customers. Will I now have to be afraid of this happening in my place? (And then, of course, I feel bad and guilty for even thinking such a selfish thing.)

I think the natural human reaction of that could be me is intensified when you're the friend of a friend. Selfishness comes when people think that will never be me.

That's not selfishness. It's self defense, and a concern for those under your care.

Thanks.

makes a mental note to make sure to set up recording equipment for the security cameras

I thank you, and every LEA in North America thanks you.

We'll thank you even more if you keep two week's worth of tapes or DVDs before you recycle them. And if you set up external cameras.

I shall make a note of it. Thank you.

Actual external cameras may have to wait a while (money's tight, with the opening so long delayed), but I've got one for the door, at least.

What could possibly drive someone to do something like this?

On second thoughts, I think I'll sleep better not knowing that answer. I'm glad there are people that can and do ask those questions, but I know I couldn't deal with the answers.

I grieve for the families of the victims, and for the Tacoma area in general. Losses like this impact all of us and, to be viciously succinct, I hope they nail the son of a bitch who opened fire.

For the safety of other officers, and civilians as well, I tend to agree.

Damn damn damn.

May those who grieve be comforted.

That is a very fine manner of phrasing the sentiment.

As an employee of UW, I was just notified that the suspect in the shooting was seen exiting a bus into UW campus about two hours ago. He's making his way north through Seattle, apparently, and presumed still armed and wounded. Now I'm worried about our local cops here, too...

Will do- thanks. They think they've tracked him to a local park here (which makes me VERY nervous), but there has been some fumbling in the manhunt thus far, so it's hard to say.
I don't know how anyone does this regularly for a living.
